Action 2 - Personal Responsibility for feelings. People in loving relationships do not make their partner responsible for their feelings. When they feel angry, hurt, anxious, depressed, resentful, irritated, guilty, or shamed, they look within at their own thoughts and behavior that may be causing their painful feelings. They do not see themselves as victims of their partner's choices. Rather ...

4 Actions of Successful Relationships | Psychology Today

Everybody has some toxic relationships in their life. Type Three: The Fake. The third type of connection is the "fake connection." This is probably a person that you like to be around, but it's just a "yes man" - you don't really know what they're thinking because they never tell you the truth to your face. Type Four: The True. The fourth kind of connection is the "true ...

4 Types of Relational Connections: The Power of the Other ...

In my experience, for relationships to really work, connections have to exist and develop on multiple levels. The extent to which these connections deepen and mature over time is likely to have a big bearing on the level of fulfillment the parties experience within the relationship. That's why it's a good idea at the very outset of a relationship to ask oneself some key questions, the ...

Connection: At the Heart of any Good Relationship

Psychology studies show that, in the long term, the most important thing in your life is your personal relationships. More important than your circumstances, hardships or successes, stuff you own or places you go, good quality relationships increase your resilience, your happiness and protect you from depression and other related "afflictions".

10 Steps to Improve Your Personal Relationships

Relationships can help you through these types of patterns by addressing something that is at the core of many addictive behaviors. Connection. People with stronger personal relationships feel connected to someone or something other than themselves. A solid foundation of healthy friendships gives you something to hold on to during difficult and stressful times that can often lead to unhealthy actions and patterns. Instead of making a New Year's resolution list of everything you're going ...
