And who can blame you for thinking you deserve the credit? The brain works its machinations in secret, conjuring ideas like tremendous magic. It does not allow its colossal operating system to be probed by conscious cognition. The brain runs its show incognito. So who, exactly, deserves the acclaim for a great idea? In 1862, the Scottish mathematician James Clerk Maxwell developed a set of fundamental equations that unified electricity and magnetism. On his deathbed, he coughed up a strange ...

Incognito! What an evocative title and the moment one begins to read this book one's life subtly changes through a deeper knowledge of the self. I know very little about neuroscience though I am beginning to understand how vitally important it is to all of us. To the uninitiated, neuroscience is perhaps a 'what on earth is that' scenario. David Eagleman has the ability to relate a most complex aspect of science in the most straightforward terms. I feel very fortunate in finding this book.

If you think your brain is a second class citizen, and your consciousness is driving things, then read Incognito: The Secret Lives of the Brain, by David Eagleman. Turns out that much of the action is below consciousness. You know this from your reactions to brake in a dangerous situation before you are fully aware of the danger, or to pull your hand from the stove before you become aware of the pain. The decision-making process of the unconscious brain is not always revealed to our ...
