

Weather patterns are often difficult to study since the world does not fit neatly into a grid. One of the best ways to study the world is to use a map of the world that shows temperature, pressure, and wind. In this lab you will examine a map of the world that shows the weather patterns. This map is for a large amount of information, but it can be used in a simple and meaningful way. In this part you will use a map of the world to study the weather patterns. You will use a map of the world to study the weather patterns. You will use a map of the world to study the weather patterns.

Read the section that has been assigned through all the stations that have a temperature of 10 degrees C. Locate the line that separates the 10 degree and 15 degree isotherms. This is the same line as the 10 degree isotherm. Reading about halfway between these readings, draw a line through the map that is a straight line.

Procedure: 1. Draw a line through the map that is a straight line. 2. Find a station where the temperature is 10 degrees. 3. Marking at that point draw a light line to show where 10 degree isotherms would be. 4. Remember if there is not a 10 degree isotherm nearby, you will need to draw halfway between the 10 and 15 degree isotherms. 5. Continue the line until it runs through all the stations and all isotherms that are 10. 6. Your line should form a closed loop. 7. Repeat steps 1-6 for all other points on the map. 8. Your line should form a closed loop.

Isolines, also referred to as contour lines, can be used to represent elevation on a map by connecting points of equal elevation, for instance. These imaginary lines provide a good visual representation of the terrain. As with all isolines, when contour lines lie close together, they represent a steep slope; lines far apart represent a gradual slope.
