Scuba Rescue Skills And Techniques

The pre-dive safety check is an essential scuba skill that should be completed before every dive. Divers perform a pre-dive check after they have donned their fully assembled scuba gear and before they enter the water. The pre-dive safety check runs through all of the diver's life support equipment to ensure that everything is working and in place, much like a pilot would run through a pre-flight check before taking to the air.

Almost any advanced scuba course will make you more competent by adding new skills and reviewing old ones. Technical diving courses teach self-reliance in the context of buddy or "team" diving. On these more challenging dives, every member of a dive team has to add to the team's abilities, not subtract from it. Everyone needs to be able to do as much as possible to rescue himself, and not be a drag on his teammates. Courses in solo diving are sometimes taught, and these can be ...
