Diller is the first, among students of the Minor Geographers, to utilize C (Cambridge University, Gg. II. 33), a mainly mathematical collection of the XVIth century. A single quaternion (ff. 122-131) contains Agath., dgn., htp., and an unfinished copy of Bosp., which collation shows to have been copied directly from B. Diller's careful account concludes that the scribe was not in his usual place of work when he wrote the geographical quinion, because he did not use for his diagrams red ink ...

Diller's work on the textual transmission of the Greek prose authors (especially the geographers), his contributions to palaeographical theory, and studies in the history of classical scholarship rank him as one of the preeminent codicologists of the 20th century. Personally very modest, he generously advised distinguished scholars as well as beginners in the discipline. Diller was a dedicated naturalist and ardent conservationist, who was devoted to his adopted state and to Indiana University.
